

In an article online Radley Balko stated: "There's no consumer interest in preventing a new technology from competing with traditional radio coverage of local news, weather and sports." The worst thing that would happen is that local stations will get hurt. That is a good thing. Maybe they will start paying attention to us listeners again instead of making all of their decisions at a national level. I stopped listening to radio long before I started paying XM. I am very happy to be getting 100% of my radio from them; and paying for it. Maybe with some real pressure from XM and Sirius, companies like Clear Channel will wake up and do what they are charged to do as owners of radio stations: serve the public.
